10:30 Case Study: 🔍

AI and Procurement: Turning Contract Data into Strategic Intelligence for Value and Risk Optimization

Contracts generate vast amounts of data, yet many organizations struggle to convert that information into meaningful action. This session explores how procurement leaders can leverage data, analytics, and emerging AI capabilities to transform contract strategy from a reactive function into a proactive driver of business value. Drawing on real-world enterprise procurement experience, I will discuss how AI-powered insights are helping organizations identify cost-saving opportunities, manage risk, optimize licensing structures, and strengthen vendor negotiations. The session will also highlight practical approaches to using contract analytics to improve decision-making, enhance governance, and align sourcing strategies with broader business objectives. Attendees will leave with actionable ideas on how to turn contract data into strategic intelligence that drives measurable outcomes.

Building Contract Teams for the Future: How Data, Governance and AI Are Redefining Contract Management

The skills CM professionals need now and in the future

- How Data & AI can enhance and optimise your model
- Example models of the future (including pathways and professional identity)
- Balancing technical, commercial, and stakeholder capability
- Creating inclusive, scalable contract teams
- Why culture and behaviours matter as much as tools

12:00 Case Study: 🔍

From Ad-Hoc to Discipline: Structuring Day-to-Day Contract Administration

Structured tracking of milestones, performance metrics, financial commitments, and compliance requirements transforms contracts from static documents into actively managed assets. Standardized workflows, documented responsibilities, and aligned reporting mechanisms ensure visibility and accountability across stakeholders. By embedding discipline into everyday contract management activities, organizations reduce risk, prevent value leakage, and create a foundation for stronger control and long-term operational stability.

12:30 PANEL DISCUSSION 🗣

Enabling Change in Contracting Through Technology, Collaboration and Innovation

Industry leaders will explore how AI-enabled automation, smarter data usage, and integrated platforms are reshaping contract lifecycles. The conversation will examine how organizations can break down silos, modernize operating models, and embed agility into contracting frameworks without increasing risk. Practical insights will highlight how technology, collaboration, and forward-thinking governance can turn contract management into a strategic driver of efficiency, resilience, and long-term value.

BUILDING A HIGH-PERFORMANCE CLM OPERATING MODEL

14:00 Case Study: 🔍

Escaping the Commoditization Trap in the BPO Industry

The biggest disruption facing the outsourcing industry is not artificial intelligence – it is the business model used to buy and sell operational services. As AI increases productivity, commercial models built around labor consumption create a growing disconnect between value creation and revenue capture. I will outline why this misalignment exists and how procurement leaders can help design a new commercial architecture that links outsourcing to productivity gains, customer value, and operational outcomes. Done right, the next generation of BPO contracts could unlock far greater value for both enterprises and providers.

Jens R. Voigt
Director Strategic Partnerships and Solutions

14:30 Case Study: 🔍

Driving Process Excellence in Contract Operations: Building Scalable and Efficient Contract Management Frameworks

It will highlight practical approaches to optimizing contract lifecycle management, enhancing transparency, and enabling teams to manage high volumes of agreements more efficiently while supporting broader business and procurement objectives. The discussion will also share practical insights on how structured contract operations can support stronger governance, performance tracking, and long-term operational resilience.

15:00 Case Study: 🔍

You Managed the Project. Did You Manage the Contract? How Claim & Change Mindset Protects Long-Term Project Value

Somewhere between the signed contract and the go-live date, something shifts. Scope expands quietly. Deadlines slip politely. Entitlements go unnoticed. Complex technology projects - especially long-term ones - don't fail overnight. They erode. With every undocumented change and every informal agreement, legitimate contractual claims are lost before they are ever raised. Prevention is key. Both contractor and customer share a common interest in preserving the contractual balance - from day one, not as a last resort. That's not confrontation. That's professionalism. And it starts with the right claim and change mindset.

Why Contract Management Is More than Administration

Connecting the Dots to Compliance Conforming Contracts with Business Function Support and Buy-in

To date there is hardly a month when new regulations, EU directives or laws are announced or brought into effect. Multilettered abbreviations are everywhere – NIS/2, CRA, DORA to name a few. Corporations navigate their way through assessment of existing processes and controls to better understand gaps and risks in their current compliance framework. Meeting needs from customers, vendors and suppliers becomes a challenging task without a sound framework and documentation. As in a global corporation, SaBine and her team are navigating back-to-back agreements on the vendor /supplier side but also support supply chain demands from customers on contractually asserting compliance. And ultimately, success will only be achieved when organizations master cross functional cooperation.

10:30 Case Study: 🔍

The Rise of Relationship Management – A Focus Shift from Buying to Managing and Its Organisational Impact

There is a continued increase in services delivered by external providers, where at the same time, both the services themselves and the regulatory frameworks governing them are becoming significantly more complex. But apart from that, these externally delivered services are no longer merely supportive add-ons; they have become integral components of core business processes, directly influencing operational stability, compliance, and strategic execution. These developments call for a renewed and more sophisticated approach to sourcing, contracting, and supplier relationship management. They also require organizational structures that are better equipped to handle cross-functional dependencies and evolving risk landscapes. In my presentation, I will examine how traditional organizational setups often struggle under these conditions and suggest practical ways to redesign processes, responsibilities, and governance models to address these challenges effectively.

From Clause Keeper to Strategic Driver: Redefining the Contract Professional in the Age of AI

The role of the contract professional is undergoing a fundamental transformation. As AI-powered tools replace manual workflows and self-driving CLM platforms redefine operational models, commercial and procurement professionals must evolve beyond traditional boundaries. This session explores how leading global organizations are leveraging intelligent automation, proactive risk mitigation, and high-performance CLM frameworks to unlock strategic value. Drawing on experience across both commercial contracting and procurement at a major international corporation, the speaker will also address how ethical, responsible, and sustainable contracting practices are reshaping supply chains – and what this means for the contract professionals of tomorrow.

From Contract Enforcement to Project Handover: Closing the Execution Gap

Signing a contract is not the end of commercial risk – it is the beginning of execution risk. The margin, reputation, and client trust of any project-driven organization are won or lost in the space between contractual promise and operational delivery. This session introduces C3 Management – Contract, Claim, and Change – as an integrated execution discipline, drawing on ANDRITZ's global Centre of Competence experience across EPC projects in food, feed, and biofuel.

14:40 Case Study: 🔍

Why Defence Technology Fails Before It's Built: Risk, Contracts and the Illusion of Assurance

Defence technology failures are often attributed to engineering challenges but in reality, many programmes are set up to fail long before development begins. Drawing on over 16 years of experience across aerospace and defence programmes, this session explores how risk is misunderstood, misallocated, and often obscured during the bid and contracting phases. It will examine how compliance-driven approaches can create false confidence, why system-level risks are consistently under-scope, and how contractual structures can unintentionally distort delivery outcomes. The session will introduce a more defensible approach to decision-making, moving beyond compliance towards clearer, threat informed judgement in complex, technology-driven environments.
