From Data Chaos to Confidence: Why Technology Is Now the Core of Sustainable Compliance

Manual processes can no longer keep pace. Modern digital tools centralize information, automate validation, and maintain a clear audit trail — giving organizations the reliability and confidence required to defend their disclosures. With technology embedded at the heart of ESG operations, compliance becomes more efficient, more accurate, and far better equipped to support strategic decision-making.

10:30 Case Study:

Adapting to the New Era of ESG Reporting Standards: Strategies for Aligning with Global Regulatory Changes

Global expectations for sustainability transparency are becoming more detailed, more comparable, and more closely tied to financial accountability. Organizations that rethink how ESG information is governed, measured, and communicated can stay ahead of evolving rules while reducing complexity across overlapping frameworks. By strengthening data quality, harmonizing internal processes, and ensuring cross-functional ownership, reporting becomes easier to manage and better equipped to support strategic decision-making in a rapidly changing regulatory landscape.

Claudia Huegel
Senior Director Corporate Responsibility, Head of ESG Rating & Reporting
Lufthansa

11:00 Morning Coffee and Networking Break

11:30 Case Study:

From CSRD Readiness to Reporting Excellence: Building Integrated ESG Disclosures and Ratings at Scale

As CSRD moves from readiness to execution, organisations face the challenge of transforming regulatory compliance into a scalable, high-quality ESG reporting and disclosure capability. This session explores how to build integrated ESG disclosures and ratings frameworks that align CSRD and ESRS requirements with investor expectations and external rating methodologies. Drawing on practical transformation experience, it will address governance and operating models, data ownership and controls, and the integration of ESG reporting processes across functions. The discussion will also highlight how consistency between regulatory disclosures and ESG ratings can be achieved at scale, enabling more credible, transparent and decision-useful sustainability reporting.

12:00 Case Study:

ESG Integrated Reporting: From Regulatory Burden to Growth Engine

Sustainability and financial performance are increasingly judged as one story. When organizations align ESG insights with business strategy and value creation, reporting evolves from a compliance requirement into a driver of competitive advantage. Strong integration reveals where growth can be unlocked through efficiency gains, innovation, and better risk management — enabling companies to demonstrate resilience and attract capital in a rapidly shifting market.

Marco Masip
Head of ESG Strategy and Reporting
Telefonica

12:30 Case Study:

Beyond Compliance: Leveraging CSRD Readiness to Accelerate Business Value Creation *

Preparing for new sustainability reporting requirements offers far more potential than simply meeting regulatory expectations. By strengthening data quality, governance, and cross-functional coordination, organizations gain clearer visibility into risks and growth opportunities. Enhanced performance insight supports informed capital allocation, credibility with investors, and momentum toward strategic sustainability goals — turning regulatory readiness into a source of competitive advantage.

ADVANCED ESG DATA SYSTEMS & INTELLIGENT REPORTING FRAMEWORKS

14:00 Case Study:

Automating ESG Data & Reporting: Cutting Manual Workflows and Ensuring On-Time Delivery

- Focus: Explore how automation transforms sustainability data management into a streamlined process.
- Single Source of Truth: Establish a reliable foundation for CSRD compliance through enhanced data governance.
- Transparency and Reliability: Ensure accurate reporting by improving the transparency of sustainability data.
- Reduced Manual Efforts: Minimize errors and cut down on manual workflows through automation.
- Significant Time Savings: Simplify data gathering and calculation, leading to substantial time savings for end-users.
- Informed Decision-Making: Empower organizations to make better decisions based on accurate and reliable sustainability data.

Maria Schaad
Head of Performance and Reporting, Sustainability Management
Merck

14:30 Case Study:

Turning Disclosure Into Action: ESG Reporting as a Catalyst for Corporate Change

High-quality sustainability information should do more than satisfy external expectations — it should guide transformation inside the organization. When insights are linked to operational priorities, performance accountability increases, new efficiencies emerge, and ambition turns into measurable progress. Strong ESG communication becomes a lever that engages leaders, influences investment decisions, and accelerates change that benefits both the business and society.

Anisha Teresa George
Manager Sustainability Reporting & ESG Performance
Philip Morris International

15:00 Case Study:

Carbon Emission Steering and Reporting at SAP

In this slot Tobias Gross will provide an overview how SAP collects, calculates and reports carbon emissions in the full value chain, how targets are set, progress is monitored and how targets are connected to executive board compensation. In addition, Tobias will also address the challenge of balancing internal steering objectives with external reporting requirements, illustrating how SAP reconciles these priorities.

Tobias Gross
Head of Sustainability Controlling
SAP

15:30 Afternoon Tea and Networking Break

15:50 Case Study:

Modernising ESG Reporting: How Data, Digitalisation and Compliance Realities Are Shaping Reporting Practices

At Hager, modernising ESG reporting is managed as a run project, embedded in core processes rather than treated as a one-off compliance exercise. The implementation of Sweep for carbon data collection and a follow up on our science based targets and Workiva for structured ESG reporting and controls has enabled end-to-end data governance, efficiency, and full audit traceability, ensuring clarity for assurance purposes.
Building on this digital foundation, Hager has deployed an AI-powered chatbot using the sustainability report as a single, comprehensive source of truth. With a full mapping across CSRD, GRI, EcoVadis, and CDP, the solution enables rapid, consistent responses to customer sustainability requests, creating a clear competitive edge in tenders while reinforcing data integrity and regulatory alignment.

Samir Rouini
Sustainability Manager: Environment & Reporting
Hager Group

16:20 PANEL DISCUSSION

Building an Integrated Sustainability Reporting Model That Drives Real Business Outcomes

Clear and connected sustainability information should support smarter decisions and measurable improvements across the business. When data flows efficiently between operational teams, finance, and leadership, organizations can highlight where value is created, address performance gaps faster, and communicate progress with confidence. The result is reporting that doesn't just describe the business — it helps shape a stronger one.

Resilient ESG Operating Models: Structuring Teams & Workflows for Continuous Reporting Cycles

A resilient ESG operating model relies on digital tools that automate data collection, streamline validation and approval workflows, and keep reporting cycles moving continuously. Smart technology and clear governance structures ensure that sustainability insights remain accurate, timely, and ready for decision-making — even as disclosure demands accelerate. With the right systems in place, reporting evolves from an annual burden into an ongoing source of performance intelligence.

09:50 Case Study:

Integrating ESG Risk Management Into Reporting Frameworks: Linking Metrics, Controls & Material Risk Drivers

- Connect ESG risks to financial outcomes and reporting priorities
- Use leading indicators to reveal emerging vulnerabilities
- Embed controls to ensure accuracy and assurance-readiness
- Align risk, sustainability & finance teams for consistent disclosures
- Strengthen stakeholder confidence through transparent, defensible data

Nelson J Muhumuza
Senior Vice President, Enterprise Services, Climate-Related Financial Risks
Citi

10:30 Case Study:

Building CSRD-Ready Environmental Data Systems: Accuracy, Auditability & Accountability

- Establishing granular traceability from source systems to final disclosure
- Ensuring audit-ready controls for emissions, resource use, and environmental impact metrics
- Coordinating sustainability, finance, IT and internal audit teams for end-to-end accountability
- Leveraging technology to replace manual consolidation with trusted automation
- Preparing for limited → reasonable assurance as assurance expectations escalate

With CSRD deadlines approaching, companies that build resilient, well-governed environmental data systems will be positioned not only to comply — but to lead with credibility in a marketplace where sustainability claims are continuously tested.

11:00 Morning Coffee and Networking Break

11:30 Case Study:

Resilient ESG Operating Models: Structuring Teams & Workflows for Continuous Reporting Cycles *

Sustainability reporting is shifting from an annual publication exercise to an always-on performance discipline. To keep pace with real-time expectations from regulators, investors and internal decision-makers, organizations must redesign how ESG information is generated, verified, and delivered.

The challenge is not data availability — it is operational resilience. Effective ESG functions now require specialized skills, smart orchestration of cross-functional responsibilities, and workflows that protect continuity even as standards evolve.

Marina Schurr
Sustainability Director
adidas

12:00 Case Study:

Greenwashing, Greenhushing & Beyond: Managing Emerging Disclosure Risks

Navigating this landscape requires stronger governance, clearer evidence for ESG statements, and a proactive understanding of stakeholder expectations. This talk highlights emerging regulatory pressures, common pitfalls, and practical steps to ensure credible, defensible communication. Attendees will learn how to balance ambition with accuracy and build reporting practices that protect trust in an increasingly scrutinised environment.

Thomas Voland
Partner and Member of the Global ESG Board and the Global Tech Group
Clifford Chance

12:30 ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION

Balancing Sustainability & Fair Competition: Antitrust Considerations in Sustainability Collaborations

As industries accelerate toward net-zero and responsible value chains, collaboration has become essential to achieving sustainability goals at scale. Yet when competitors work together — for example on decarbonization pathways, circularity standards, shared ESG data, or low-carbon procurement — the line between permitted cooperation and prohibited market coordination can quickly blur.

This roundtable will explore how organizations can confidently pursue sustainability partnerships while remaining compliant with global competition laws. Senior experts will address evolving regulatory expectations, recent antitrust enforcement trends related to ESG initiatives, and practical structures that allow companies to collaborate without distorting fair competition.

13:00 Business Lunch

14:00 Case Study:

Materiality, Metrics & Messaging: Building a Sustainability Scorecard Your Stakeholders Trust

This conversation examines how organizations can build a scorecard that captures both the strategic importance of ESG priorities and the practical reality of execution. The focus is on aligning material topics with decision-driving indicators, strengthening the traceability of performance data, and presenting results in formats that resonate with diverse audiences — investors, regulators, customers, and employees.

Core elements include:

- Identifying value-shaping issues through rigorous materiality analysis
- Designing metrics that illuminate outcomes, not just activities
- Creating scorecards that prompt internal action rather than sit on a shelf
- Communicating progress with honesty — highlighting achievements and challenges

A credible sustainability scorecard becomes more than a measurement tool: it becomes a trust-building mechanism that connects purpose with performance and reinforces long-term value creation.

Edda Dankmeyer
Head of Sustainable Development Communications
Boehringer Ingelheim

14:30 Case Study:

Elevating ESG Report Quality Through Advanced Review, Validation and Approval Protocols

ESG reporting has entered a new era — one where precision equals credibility. Stakeholders no longer accept sustainability claims at face value; they expect disclosures that are verifiable, comparable, and resilient under challenge. Achieving this requires more than data collection…it requires discipline.

The focus is the transformation of ESG reporting governance from reactive compilation to deliberate quality assurance. That shift involves placing expert challenge at every stage of the reporting chain, applying technology that reveals inconsistencies before others do, and ensuring that approval rights sit where accountability truly lives.
